

Published based on AFC Pro Bowl Chances

AFC Pro Bowl Chances

Aloha, Honolulu! Pro football brings back to Hawaii for the 2011 Pro Bowl. The annual competition of the AFC and NFC's best will take place Sunday, Jan. 30, 2011, at 7 p.m. ET at Aloha Stadium.

The greatest of the best in the NFC and the AFC team up against one another in the 2011 Pro Bowl this Sunday in Hawaii. When gambling on the football here are some Pro Bowl statistics to think about.

The AFC defeated the National Football Conference in 2010 at 41-34, which put the total Pro-Bowl historic winning record at an even 20-20 for both divisions. Tom Brady is currently injured and won't be participating. The National Football Conference won as the underdogs in 2009, they took the AFC 30-21. The competition went under the 65.5 showed in Sportsbook. This wasn't the first year that the National Football Conference won as underdogs, in 2008 they were posted in Sports book as plus 3, but beat the AFC a massive 42-20. Beating the total which was posted at 62.5. But they aren't constantly the underdogs, in 2007 they were favored and won by 3, but did not cover the 3.5 point spread.

In Aloha Stadium this Sunday January 30th the AFC Pro Bowl team will be directed by head coach Bill Belichick who will see a lot of his own players on the AFC lineup in this year's Pro Bowl game. QBs for the AFC will be Philip Rivers, Peyton Manning and Matt Cassel. The National Football Conference Pro Bowl team will be directed by head coach Mike Smith of the Atlanta Falcons. QBs for the National Football Conference will be Michael Vick, Matt Ryan and Drew Brees. The AFC will feature a ton of qbs that are essentially really the same. Philip Rivers and Peyton Manning are all statues in the pocket, and they all have some major time arms. The National Football Conference clearly has the greater crop of receivers to work with too, as White, Calvin Johnson, DeSean Jackson, and Greg Jennings are better to Reggie Wayne, Brandon Lloyd, Dwayne Bowe, and the newly picked Wes Welker, who is the alternate for the injured Andre Johnson.

After being performed Miami prior to Super Bowl XLIV, pro football Pro Bowl returns to what plenty of think about its rightful home, Aloha Stadium in Honolulu, Hawaii.

The Pro Bowl, which features the NFC vs the AFC, is planned to be competed one week prior to the Super Bowl, instead of its traditional space one week after. This year signifies the second year back to back that the annual all-star competition will be played a week before the Super Bowl, as an alternative to a week following. (Meaning, the players on the two clubs that just won entry to Super Bowl XLV - the Packers and Steelers - is not going to play in the Pro Bowl.)

Place your Super Bowl bets at the on line sportsbook today!

You can also find this article published on AFC Pro Bowl Chances, and on the tag pages AFC, Bowl, football, head coach bill, national football conference, wes welker.