Here is the week in Football betting internet where we find out if the Houston Texans or the Jaguars are playoff competitors. The Texans started the season great but they've fell apart whilst the Jacksonville Jaguars have been here and there. Both squads are 4-4 and as you would expect, the football betting line is close on this game.

The victor of this competition will be in the playoff picture at 5-4 while the loser will be labeled as a scam and in serious trouble. You should figure that it is going to take ten victories to get into the playoffs in the AFC and that means six losses is all you can afford. The loser of this competition will already have five at the sports book.

The Texans have done almost nothing but lose since getting back from their bye week. This Sunday they will hit the road for Jacksonville to battle against the Jaguars in Week 10.

The Jaguars ought to be well rested, because Week 9 was their bye, previous to which they had a big win over the Dallas Cowboys. The Houston Texans will travel to play the Jacksonville jaguars on November 14th in a competition that will established the tone for each their seasons. The Houston Texans have unhappy several forecasts that selected them to win the AFC South this year. The Texans are not out of the race at all but games against their AFC South opponents are must win competitions. Houston's loss to the Chargers on their home field was a challenging blow to their expectations of making the NFL Playoffs and they can not afford to lose this game to Jacksonville. The Jacksonville Jaguars are at home so they are a one point fave in this match.

The Houston Texans defense has been troubled to keep up with most Football offenses this season. They're allowing near to 300 yards a match through the air but they've been decent at stopping the run. The over 400 yards of total offense the Houston Texans have allowed is the most in the NFL and the Jaguars offense have had their times. Brian Cushing is not making the impact many hoped for when he returned from a four match suspension and the defense continues to be allowing major figures.

David Garrard returns to the starting lineup for the Jacksonville jaguars well rested following a bye week. Garrard is a workable quarterback that indicates glances of greatness on occasion. His receivers at his fingertips are regular with Mercedes Lewis and Mike Sims-Walker leading the way. Seem for a lively fight between AFC South enemies in this one and plenty of scoring. The Jacksonville jaguars offense has a minor edge over the Texans defense.

The Texans passing competition has taken a nose dive but the running game has been the one shining light on the offense. Arian Foster has continued to be the number 1 running back in the league and his back ups Steve Slaton and Derrick Ward have also produced when Foster has taken a breather. Look for the Texans to attempt to get their passing match set early. If Andre Johnson continues to be hobbled by ankle problems it may curtail the offense a tad nevertheless Matt Schaub still has plenty of targets.
