

Published based on Football Wagering - Dallas Against Minnesota

Football Wagering - Dallas Against Minnesota

Football sport betting odds makers and odds makers had Dallas and Minnesota pegged as NFL sports betting faves to make the playoffs this year and compete for the Super Bowl. Football gambling dynamics have modified significantly, nevertheless, as both squads have fallen flat on their faces from the gate and face football bets playoff elimination.

Minnesota will host Dallas in a true do or die NFC matchup on Sunday. Kickoff for the FOX broadcast is at four:10 PM Eastern and the sportsbook started out with Minnesota as a 1.5 point home favorite and with an over under of 43.5.

The loser of this game will face a near insurmountable hole to dig from for qualifying in the playoffs.

This match is a rematch from last season's NFC divisional playoffs which Minnesota won 34-3.

The Cowboys have a record of 1-3 both straight up and with the pro football gambling lines. Dallas is arriving off a 34-27 home loss to the Tennessee titans. Dallas collapsed with a dozen penalties such as an excessive celebration call following a touchdown that set up a long kickoff return by the Titans that headed to a touchdown.

Tony Romo was up and down the field as quarterback as he passed for 406 yards with 3 tds but 3 significant interceptions. Dallas ranks 24th in rushing and their inability to run the ball has put heat on Romo. Dallas ranks 8th in total defense but 21st in points granted.

It is specifically unsatisfying that the Cowboys have fallen as far as they've thinking about the anticipations their owner placed on the squad at the start of the year. Jerry Jones had big hopes for the team to become the first ever in the NFL to host the Super Bowl in their own stadium. Of course that doesn't seem very very likely to take place at this point.

The Vikings are additionally 1-3 both straight up and with the Football gambling odds and have tumbled under the total three times.

The Vikings are arriving from a horrible 29-20 loss at the Jets on {Monday Night Football} that was one of the worst ever performances for qb Brett Favre, who concluded 14-34 for 264 yards with two lost fumbles and final interception that was run back for a Jets Touchdown to eliminate a comeback attempt.

Favre has a horrible 67.0 Qb rating compared to 107 last year. Running back Adrian Peterson possesses 480 yards rushing to lead the offense and Randy Moss did catch a Touchdown pass from Favre in his 1st game back as a Viking on Monday. Favre is just plain starting to look old and tired. On top of his difficulties on the field, he's additionally being charged with harassment off the field. It is not really an amazing end to an amazing career.

It's tricky to say who has the edge in this one as both squads are stressed. Ultimately the Minnesota Vikings 5th rated defense and 9th rated rushing attack headed by Peterson might be the NFL gambling advantage in this one.

You can also find this article published on Football Wagering - Dallas Against Minnesota, and on the tag pages Bowl, field, football, nfc divisional playoffs, sport betting odds, tony romo.