

Published based on March Madness Gambling - Final Four Preview

March Madness Gambling - Final Four Preview

Saturday's Final Four in March Madness gambling has a marquee contest between Connecticut and Kentucky and a game of underdogs as VCU takes on Butler. Let's look at both games and the March Madness odds at the sports book.

VCU versus Butler - 6:10 pm Eastern - CBS

The Bulldogs are 2.5 point favorites with the total showed at 133.5. Virginia Commonwealth is the Cinderella story as they were not even expected to make the NCAA Championship. They had to play in the "First Four" game and handily managed USC. The Rams then took out Georgetown, Purdue, Florida State and #1 Kansas to reach the Final 4. Butler has been the cardiac kids of the tournament with last 2nd victories over Old Dominion, Pittsburgh, Wisconsin and Florida. The Bulldogs are the most experienced team of the leftover 4 teams.

Connecticut versus Kentucky - 8:50 pm Eastern - CBS

This is the marquee competition of the two Final 4 contests and the Wildcats are 2-point favorites in March Madness gambling probabilities with the total being 140. Connecticut is the third seed whilst Kentucky is a 4 seed. This matchup nearly never happens in the Final 4. In fact, it has only happened one time in history since the championship expanded and that was in 1990. The 3 seed that season was Duke and they beat Arkansas. This game on Saturday highlights the youthful expertise of Kentucky against Kemba Walker and the Huskies. Kentucky has had the tougher road to the Final Four as they had to get by Princeton, West Virginia, top seed Ohio State and then 2nd seed North Carolina. Connecticut has had an easier road with wins over Bucknell, Cincinnati, San Diego State and Arizona. Kentucky head coach John Calipari is major his third squad to the Final Four as he took Massachusetts back in 1996 and Memphis in 2008.

Not likely Final 4

Practically nobody in March Madness wagering forecasted that these four squads would make the Final Four. ESPN had nearly 6 million individuals enter their tournament match and merely 2 got the Final 4 correct. Neither has an ideal bracket but that is next to extremely hard. You might have thought that picking this Final Four could have been next to out of the question but with 6 million brackets and merely two people that did it those are odds of 3 million to 1. This is the first Final Four in championship history where there's not at least one #1 or #2 seed. It's furthermore the greatest combined seed total in tourney history.

You can also find this article published on March Madness Gambling - Final Four Preview, and on the tag pages , History, kemba walker, march madness wagering, Saturday, seed ohio state.