The Heat and their "Three Kings of Miami" are likely to replace the Lakers, at least early on, as the favorites to win the NBA Finals and to be the most well-liked squad on the board. But as 2-time defending world victors with a fantastic squad and legendary coach heading back the Lakers might have the last laugh. Furthermore the Heat are going to be competing in the same division as the Celtics, and even with their "Miami Thrice" era squad, the Miami Heat might be asking a lot to manage to step up and defeat the Boston Celtics and their extraordinary record to get to the Finals.

The online sportsbook opened up with the Los Angeles Lakers as a +250 choice to win the NBA tournament. The Los Angeles Lakers were an impossible -130 favorite to win the Western Conference and had an over/under win total of 56.5.

What has long been intriguing to NBA gambling odds makers regarding the Los Angeles Lakers has been their lack of board worth, which was graphically illustrated last year when they won 57 regular season games and yet paid out just 33 times.

This all goes back to their popularity with the general betting community, which the same as a stock, takes off in price whereas driving down the value as sports books try to make for an appealing price on LA's competitors. Miami probably will experience this effect in 2010-11, particularly in the beginning with every one of the hype.

Coach Phil Jackson was talked from retirement and will aim for his 12th NBA world tournament ring to rate as probably the biggest coach in the history of pro sports. Jackson has already ensured his spot as among the greatest coaches in NBA history. Every year has been a successful one with him as head coach. He has received 11 NBA titles as head coach and has won two rings as a player with the New York Knicks back in the 1970s.

Jackson seems to get better with age as does the team celebrity Kobe Bryant, who was a beneficial Basketball betting online resource in the playoffs a year ago and is the all time foremost scorer in the fabled history of the Lakers surpassing "The Logo" Jerry West.

Bryant averaged 27 points per match last year but must furthermore be identified for his intangible leadership in the locker room and on the court.

Other huge Basketball betting names include Pau Gasol, who had a fantastic playoff run, and Ron Artest. Guard Derek Fisher is the uncelebrated hero and considered by Bryant to be a crucial factor and leader.

For smart handicappers the Lakers could ultimately bring more benefit and a superior price than in past years.
