How to play

The matches for cornhole are started with innings or frames of play. During those innings, a player would need to throw exactly 4 bags. The player then would need to deliver the bag from either side of the pitcher's box, the left or the proper but in any single inning or frame, all of those 4 bags should be delivered from the box of exactly the same pitcher and it can also quite happen that two players, both of them, can throw bags from the box of exactly the same pitcher. Either way goes. A player also has to have a three foot box to throw from. A player should throw in bags within a time frame of twenty seconds. The timeframe will begin when a player will begin to step onto a box of a pitcher using the intention of pitching. If a player scores in an inning, he has a opportunity to be initial to pitch within the subsequent inning. If no one has scored in pitches, the player or the team who was last to pitch will be the first to pitch within the subsequent.

This game can be player by 4 players. It can be played as a single match or a doubles match. If it's a doubles match, the 4 players will need to form two teams of two players for each. A member from the team will then throw a bag from a box or a cornhole platform whilst the other member will throw a bag from the other. They will alternately throw the bags towards the cornhole boards till all 4 bags are finished up. Then the other team will replace the first team then do their thing till an inning is finished.

The Cornhole Boards

The board that you need to land on for a score is really a cornhole board. It's a board made of sometimes plywood and has a diameter of six inches and centered nine inches from the top and twelve inches from each side of the platform edges.
