Dallas Cowboys Jerseys

Helmet, jerseys and pants, this is the basic Dallas Cowboys uniform. Although all the items are important for the team image, it is clear that the dallas cowboys jerseys are the most popular and striking in terms of impact on the public. The royal blue with numbers, letterings and stripes on the sleeves is famous nationwide. The road jerseys are often referred to as Stars and Stripes, and their lettering and numbers are white with navy pinstripes. Each sleeve is striped with white-gray-white and on top of these stripes there is the Cowboys star logo. Finally, the V-shaped neck design in the Dallas Cowboys jerseys makes the items fashionable and comfy.

Dallas Cowboys jerseys also carry a chest crest placed right under the National Football League shield. Silver and blue dominate the entire uniform, including the pants and the helmets. Then, the player's name is written on a special jersey plate and a serified font is used for the lettering. Several modifications have been made to the uniform that we know today, as the design changed from complex to simple. Thus, in the 60s the Dallas Cowboys jerseys had a star on each shoulder; these jerseys were blue and the sleeves white. With the simpler vision came the preference for solid colors and just the stripes on the sleeves were kept.

The logo has known little changes over the years although modifications were made to the uniform in repeated turns. On various occasions, fans could admire rather unique Dallas Cowboys jerseys as it happened in the 1994 Thanksgiving match when the team wore white double-starred jerseys. The navy double star was also present on the Dallas Cowboys jerseys in the 1995 games of Washington and Philadelphia. The double star is seldom seen, but when it appears, it definitely makes sensation.

At present there are three official dallas cowboys authentic jerseys and while the players wear the regular uniform in most of the games, we can see the other two versions at least once or twice a year. In the NFL history, the Cowboys re-wrote the unofficial rule according to which a team should wear the colored jersey when playing at home. This is how the white Dallas Cowboys jerseys served for both distance and home matches. The set example was followed by the Washington Redskins or the Miami Dolphins.
