Nike Victory Red Tour Driver Review

Hello! it's me, from the golf clubs review page in this article on my site. This kind of club is fantastic along with powerful. Nike scores high on this bad boy. Once once more, Nike has yet to allow us to down. Especially against major contenders like Ping, along with Titleist.

So what would make this club so unique? Let's take a glimpse:

The driver itself will be 420 cc, but can deliver power for a 460 cc head and has the capability to "shape" your the game of golf shot. There are compression golf ball channel offers taht good increased overall compression of the body, giving increased ball speeds through the entire face.

Another great feature may be the velvety tour grip. It provides all weather performance for just a firm comfortable grip that enables consistent performance.

All the materials which create this club tend to be high quality and offers you a high quality gain. If you are trying to find a new club in your set, you will never go wrong with this one. Look at what the experts tend to be saying:

"This driver is definitely absolute beast, mostly because the Project X shaft, which has to be among the finest feeling shafts on the market. I tried a bunch of new drivers at Golfsmith yesterday, and nothing came near to numbers I get through the VR, in terms with launch, spin, and overall distance. The head is a little smaller, and the particular face is deeper when compared with other Nike drivers. This may not be a driver for rookies. But it is lots forgiving, and for traditionalists, the particular sound and feel tend to be about perfect. The sound is powerful but to some extent muted, and the ball rockets there are various club face. And the particular Project X shaft. This shaft is bona fide. It loads and unloads very well, and the shaft is definitely absolute spin killer, that is certainly both good and negative. Overall, I highly recommend this underlooked driver that will mid and low handicappers.
